An efficient, automated, and user-friendly system for producing high-resolution DNA fingerprints for forensic applications. We have developed a new automated DNA fingerprinting system that offers considerable advantages over the current methods. In the system, we have used a simple and rapid alkaline lysis protocol. In addition, we have incorporated a sequencing module to the system. The simplicity of the system is demonstrated by the ability to perform 16 loci multiplex assay in less than 6 h, using a single tube and liquid handling. We have optimized the primer concentration and eliminated the need for any user manipulations. The system has been tested in both a forensic and a research setting. The forensic system is capable of producing highly resolving DNA profiles with seven loci out of nine available (STRs and the sex-typing amelogenin gene) and is suitable for the analysis of a large number of samples. The two-step protocol results in a high number of amplification products that can be readily resolved in an automated, user-friendly system with high sample throughput. These DNA profiles have excellent resolution, leading to identification of individual alleles down to the 0.5% level. A data analysis system for the automated DNA fingerprinting system has been developed that is both efficient and highly user friendly. The system has been used for an evaluation of the potential of this approach for forensic casework purposes. A company that makes fabric dye used in baby products said Friday that it is halting production at a plant in the south Houston area after discovering mold that the firm said was potentially tainted with toxic chemicals. CadburyDyes International discovered the mold at the facility on June 7, and the company is now working with local and federal health officials to investigate what caused the mold and to contain the damage. The company said the mold was found in products packaged at a warehouse operated by Bridgestone Americas in Houston. “In order to prevent the mold from affecting the products, we are requesting Bridgestone Americas immediately suspend the shipment of fabrics at their Houston facility,” the company wrote in a statement. “We take this matter very seriously and we want our customers to be safe and safe use.” The company said it notified the FDA of the mold find and that the Bridgestone facility where the mold was found is now closed. “The FDA is currently investigating the matter and we are cooperating with them,” CadburyDyes International said in its statement.

Representatives of the company did not immediately respond to requests for additional information. The Bridgestone facility at 2505 Main Street in Houston was formerly owned by The Dow Chemical Company and has been the company's warehouse since 2008. CadburyDyes International, based in South Reading, Mass., is one of the largest producers of fabric dyes and specialty chemicals in the U.S. About 25 percent of the company's annual sales of $297 million are for consumer-based products, and about 40 percent are for industrial products, the company said.1.
